Experienced Cottonwood Heights Divorce Attorney

Are you considering hiring a Cottonwood Heights divorce attorney for the purpose of getting out of an unhappy relationship and moving forward with your life? If so, you probably don't need us to tell you that you're going through a difficult time that entails a lot of stress. Fortunately, however, even though making a firm decision to go through with divorce proceedings is probably one of the hardest things anyone can do in their lives, many people feel a sense of relief when they decide on going through with a divorce. It's important for those in this position to avoid rushing into things, though, especially when choosing a divorce lawyer in Cottonwood Heights, UT. You need a skilled, experienced attorney to help you navigate the potentially rough waters involved in a divorce, even if your breakup is fairly amicable.

Here's how we can help:

Custody and Visitation

Child custody and visitation issues are among the most difficult aspects of divorce. In the past, custody was almost universally given to the female parent unless extenuating circumstances were involved, but things have changed substantially — and this means that custody issues often become heated. Unfortunately, the children are the ones who suffer the most when parents are unable to come to agreements concerning custody, and a skilled lawyer on your side can help ensure that the best interests of your children will be well-represented during the divorce process. We believe strongly in facilitating outcomes in which each parent is treated as fairly as possible and that decisions are reached that benefit the family as a whole even though they will be living apart going forward.

In order to ensure that children's best interests are protected, we ask each couple to attend a divorce education class in order to provide them with the personal tools necessary to begin the process of crafting a positive parenting narrative while maintaining separate households.

Property and Assets

As your divorce attorney in Cottonwood Heights Utah, we'll strive to make certain that you get your fair share of marital property and assets. Utah has a mandatory requirement for mediation in cases where division of property and assets are a part of the picture. This process helps ensure that all applicable assets, including property, are thoroughly evaluated for the purpose of reaching the most equitable distribution possible. We make a point of keeping current on Utah property distribution laws in order to help our clients achieve fair divisions of assets.

Mediation

Utah law requires mediation in other areas of divorce besides property and assets division if the two involved parties are unable to come to an agreement on their own. The mediate process ensures that the individual needs and preferences of both parties are brought to the table during the negotiating process. This provides divorcing couples the opportunity to come to mutual agreements and hopefully avoid painful and lengthy trials. Utah also mandates that a 90-day waiting period take place between the date of the initial court filing and the day that the final decree is handed down by a judge, which is meant to provide the couple with ample time to work through the twists and turns of divorce and family law in Cottonwood Heights.

Please don't hesitate to contact us at your convenience if you're in the market for a Cottonwood Heights divorce lawyer. We're here to help you get through this phase as quickly and smoothly as possible so that you can move on toward a brighter future.
