Child Custody and Child Support Matters

Children do best when their relationship with each parent remains as consistent as possible during and after the divorce. If you and your former spouse have minor children together, your attorney will continue to focus on their best interests and encourage all parties to do the same. Whether you will receive or pay child support, share custody or have primary custody, your divorce lawyer in West Jordan will make sure the outcome is best for your children.

Division of Assets and Debts

Deciding which assets and debts are marital and which are individual can be challenging when going through a divorce in West Jordan. This is especially true when it comes to deciding who should remain in the marital home and who should move out. You will also need to divide other assets such as vehicles and retirement accounts and debts such as credit cards and medical bills. Because the decisions you make now will affect you for years to come, West Jordan divorce lawyer David Pedrazas will fight hard for your rights and ensure that you're happy with the settlement before proposing it to the other attorney.

How to File for Divorce in Utah

The first thing to understand about divorce in Utah is that this is a no-fault state. That means only one party needs to initiate the proceedings and doesn't have to provide an official reason for seeking a divorce. Both will sign a statement that the marriage has broken down beyond repair when completing the divorce paperwork. Your attorney can assist you with preparing the divorce filing if you're the petitioner or respond to it if you receive a divorce complaint from your spouse.

One party must have been a resident of Utah and the county where he or she petitioned for or responded to the divorce complaint for at least 90 days. Utah also imposes a 90-day wait until a court hearing regarding the divorce decree takes place.
